POETRY.

A.

Answer me, burning stars of night, . . . 16
Ah, must we then believe the doom, . . . 24
Another form of air serene, . . . 56
At dawn Aurora gaily breaks, . . . 64
A fellow-being seeking for relief, . . . 72
A woman sauntering near a river's brink, . . . 80
Awake—my love—the night is past, . . . 104
A boy beheld a blooming rose, . . . 135
A boy beheld a little pig, . . . 135
As the tears of the even, . . . 136
Ask the fair girl, whose flowing tears, . . . 144
And thou art gone—another yet, . . . 152
A voice is heard in the winds and waves, . . . 174
Ah how severe the cup that bears, . . . 176
All hail to the patriot soul, . . . 176
A weary time, thou'st been away, . . . 192
As travellers through Italia's land, . . . 258
As sweeps the bark before the breeze, . . . 286
Ah me, what a sight the list displays, . . . 293
Alas for me! a cloud has hung, . . . 294
Alas, our pleasant moments fly, . . . 320
A star arose on my early days, . . . 344
A poor way-faring man of grief, . . . 400

B.

Bring flowers, young flowers, . . . 16
But if for me thou dost forsake, . . . 64
Blame not the sigh the o'ercharged breast, . . . 160
Bright star, brilliant star, from thy golden bed of rest, . . . 224
Before a spacious dome I stood, . . . 240
Bird of the broad and sweeping wing, . . . 248
Bright be the skies that cover thee, . . . 312
Be thy friend? Yes, believe me, . . . 328
Beauty of solitude! with pensive eye, . . . 336
Behave yourself before folk, . . . 376

C.

Come, oh come, . . . 2
Charlie is my darling, . . . 112
Come, tell me, . . . 128
Child, amidst the flowers at play, . . . 190
Come take the gentle harp of sorrow, . . . 216
Come, thou old, unloving scribe, . . . 248
Come, drink with me—and may the voice, . . . 352

D.

Day is peeping through the hills, . . . 128
Do ye weep for the dead? . . . 160
Dear Mary Ann, the sparkling gems, . . . 224

E.

Evening's breeze began to sigh, . . . 112
Farewell, oh farewell—ere the sun from his pillow, . . . 24

F.

Farewell, but still remember, . . . 80
Farewell, farewell, thou setting sun, . . . 96
Farewell, farewell, my charming maid, . . . 104
Farewell, great painter of mankind, . . . 248
From his lovely grove by the sea-washed sand, . . . 260
Farewell, my love, I part from thee, . . . 272
Farewell, farewell, and let us part, . . . 280
Farewell to thee!—farewell to thee, . . . 312
From a willow suspended a minstrel's harp hung, . . . 312
Fear was within the tossing bark, . . . 328

G.

Go, ah go! this fond delay, . . . 48
Go, youth beloved, to distant glades, . . . 64
Green wave the oak for ever o'er thy rest, . . . 104
"Good morning, merchant!"—a Bard, good morn'" . . . 297
Good people, listen to my lays, . . . 392

H.

His form was that of youth, . . . 8
Hast thou ever beheld on the bosom of May, . . . 32
Her likeness! why it is a vain endeavour, . . . 32
How deceiving is earth! . . . 56
He clasped her in his fond embrace, . . . 56
How lovely does the setting sun, . . . 72
Hail, lovely orb, whose placid light, . . . 128
How lightsome was my heart, and young, . . . 152
Harp of my heart, in earlier years, . . . 152
Hail, daughter of time, . . . 157
Her Leghorn hat was of the bright gold tinge, . . . 312
Hebe had filled the cup of Jove, . . . 312
Hark! hear that solemn chime! . . . 376
Here, put on thy finger this ring, love, . . . 376
Heard ye that knell, . . . 379

I.

I go, I go, . . . 2
I look upon the face, . . . 8
I never would have drawn Endymion thus, . . . 19
I've been roaming! I've been roaming, . . . 32
I've been tippling! I've been tippling! . . . 233
I love the mortal who inherits, . . . 40
I wait the hour anticipation brings, . . . 40
I come, I come! ye have called me long, . . . 48
If all our hopes and all our fears, . . . 48
I sometimes feel as I could blot, . . . 56
I sat me on my mother's grave, . . . 64
I often think each tottering form, . . . 84
I took the scroll, I could not brook, . . . 89, 208
I saw her once so fresh and fair, . . . 96
It falls upon the youthful ear, . . . 112
In the old days when Athens wore her crown, . . . 120
I am honoured, this day, sir, with challenges two, . . . 112
It is in vain I seek, . . . 112
I swear to love thee, gentle maid, . . . 128
I travel on—I travel on, . . . 128
I would not meanly condescend, . . . 124
In those proud days when polished Athens rose, . . . 131
I am an eldest son. My years, . . . 136
I love thee not for rosy cheek, . . . 136
I had a dream of light and love, . . . 136
I come from the caves of the frozen north, . . . 152
It is a glorious morning. Storm, . . . 168
I dreamed that through the folds I strayed, . . . 176
I've heard of two who loved, . . . 211
In thy melting blue eyes, . . . 216
It was the morning of a day in spring, . . . 216
I ask not gold's illusive light, . . . 216
I ask not to be with a diadem crowned, . . . 222
I have loved, and the love that I bore thee, . . . 224
I cannot leave the charms of love, . . . 224
It is a tale that many songs have told, . . . 232
I'll tell you, friend, what sort of wife, . . . 240
I heard a story once in days gone by, . . . 256
I met thee 'mid the crowd last night, . . . 256
I cannot speak in joyous strains, . . . 256
I hate the world—it hath no sun, . . . 264
I will not wreathe thy sunny hair, . . . 272
If it be true, celestial power, . . . 272
I have listened, bard, to thy witching lute, . . . 280
If you bright orbs, that gem the night, . . . 280
I long to see thy soft blue waters flow, . . . 280
I love thee—I love thee, . . . 288
I trust the frown thy features wear, . . . 296
In fancy's dream, or pleasures beam, . . . 312
I saw an eye so wildly bright, . . . 320
I saw from yonder silent cave, . . . 336
I fain would wake the notes of joy, . . . 344
I saw two clouds at morning, . . . 352
I think of thee when morning springs, . . . 368
I walk'd among the bright May flowers, . . . 384

I saw her in the coffin, . . . 382
I like that ring—that ancient ring, . . . 392
I came in haste, with cursing breath, . . . 400
I have loved—who has not? . . . 400
Love's barque was launched on rapture's tide, . . . 40
Long may summer's beauty linger, . . . 64
Leave me to night, I'll watch the corpse alone, . . . 80
List how mournfully the breeze, . . . 88
Like some swift meteor on the arch of night, . . . 120
List not Ambition's call, . . . 160
Lady thou art passing fair, . . . 184
Literary Pandemonium, by Woodworth, . . . 192
Like snow that falls where waters glide, . . . 264
Love is a sickness full of woes, . . . 264
Let a soldier come, . . . 320
Look how the wood walks hither tend, . . . 346
Love, art thou waking or sleeping, . . . 371

M.

My home is on the mountain rock, . . . 32
My heart is sad—oh quickly bring, . . . 144
My being still is linked to thine, . . . 168
My mother, ere my infant tongue, . . . 200
Man holds it as a right of man, . . . 208
My lyre! give me my lyre, . . . 224
My name! my country! what are they to thee, . . . 237
Minstrel, I know not who thou art, . . . 256
Morning of life! too soon o'ercast, . . . 264
Maiden! come down from the lonely bower, . . . 296
My child, this is thy natal day, . . . 352
My gentle harp, once more I waken, . . . 360
My horse stands ready on the way, . . . 376
My mother's voice! how often creeps, . . . 400

N.

No, Ida, no, . . . 48
Now winter comes with awful gloom, . . . 120
Neither the frown of the soft west wind, . . . 184
Not for the promise of the laboured field, . . . 238
Nay tell me, thou grotto of moss, . . . 328
Night's jewelled hand is flinging, . . . 352

O.

Oh, do ye see that withered leaf? . . . 8
Ope wide the portal to thy throne, . . . 16
Oh I have dreamed of such an hour! . . . 16
O day for ever sad, for ever drear, . . . 16
Oh take, young seraph, take thy harp, . . . 16
On my table before me my last sixpence lay, . . . 32
Oh Mary, dear Mary, bright peerless flower, . . . 53
Oh, woman, if by simple will, . . . 64
Oh, lady, in the blaze of day, . . . 86
Oh it rose on my ear like the chant of a fairy, . . . 74
Oh say not that a gloom is cast, . . . 72
Oh, rise my love! awake! awake! . . . 72
Oh fy, oh fy, it silly were, . . . 80
Oh, these are scenes that to the thoughtful mind, . . . 88
Oh sleep ye brave—still calmly sleep, . . . 88
Oh woman's pure devotion, . . . 88
Oh, there are happy days, . . . 112
O melon-scented lily, . . . 128
Oh who hath ever at his heart withstood, . . . 128
Oh, parting to the lovée's thought, . . . 136
Oh what is so beautiful half to behold, . . . 160
Oh, there is a dream of early youth, . . . 184
Off with the witch, I say, . . . 189
Oh sweetly frae the gleaming skies, . . . 203
O, I never will marry a puritan lad, . . . 208
Oh the days when I was young, . . . 208
Oh earth there's nothing worth possessing, . . . 232
O, could I wake some tuneful lyre, . . . 248
O seize life's present hour of spring, . . . 248
Oh nature! e'er delightful to my heart, . . . 264
Oh, do not ask for a mirthful lay, . . . 272
Oh, if below one beam of bliss, . . . 280
Oh, why are the shadows of Mem'ry stealing, . . . 280
O, I'm the fairy queen of sound, . . . 280
Oh! still lies thy harp, dearest isle of the ocean, . . . 288
Oh who has not wakened in days of his childhood, . . . 288
Over the level placie, where mountains, . . . 302
O'er a cliff proudly towering, . . . 304
O list, my beloved! O list to me now, . . . 304
Oh the glorious sight, . . . 312
Oh, who art thou of pensive beauty, . . . 360
Oft as the evening hours appear, . . . 368
Oh Love, e'en in thy happiest hours, . . . 379

P.

Pure placid lake! how would I love, . . . 30
Pale was her cheek, her raven hair, . . . 30
Past are the days when friendship seemed, . . . 352
Painter, trace a pure white brow, . . . 360
Pity, My Lord, the wretched plight, . . . 400

R.

Regret it not—thou sayest, Estelle, . . . 128
Rocks of my country, let the cloud, . . . 151
Roseate tint of purest virtue, . . . 360

S.

Summer returns, but where are they? . . . 8
She stood before her father's gorgeous tent, . . . 24
Shade of my mother, bow down, . . . 32
Stay, Elo'sa, tell me not, . . . 72
Stay, gaoler, stay, and hear my wo, . . . 96
Should all the world deceive me, love, . . . 160
Sweet modest flower hide not your head, . . . 176
Some deem it strange that hearts should break, . . . 176
She sat beneath the verdant shade, . . . 184
Spirit of air!—thy purple wings, . . . 198
Soldier, sleep—the fight is done, . . . 206
She spoke of love, and round her lips, . . . 208
She was a lovely one—her shape was light, . . . 208
Sweet star of eve! whose trembling ray, . . . 216
Since thou and the stars, dear goddess, . . . 222
She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps, . . . 280
See you beneath you cloud so dark, . . . 294
Still was the wave of the Ægean Sea, . . . 304
Sweetest minstrel, forsake not the haunts, . . . 320
Sing on ye birds, . . . 352
Sit down, Mr. Clipstone, and take, . . . 368
Says Dick to Jack "Your neighbours say, . . . 400

'Twas lovely as the splendid bow, . . . 8
There is a sudden wail of wo, . . . 16
The mystery of this lingering pain, . . . 24
The thought which hovers o'er thy mind, . . . 23
They made us a cave so hot and dry, . . . 32
Tread softly, love, . . . 32
There is a sadness on thy brow, . . . 40
There stood he tranced, till in the air, . . . 40
'Twas sweet the softened mind to trace, . . . 40
The dance was o'er, each gallant bow'd, . . . 40
'Tis said Love's emblem is the rose, . . . 48
The ocean has its silent caves, . . . 48
'Twas moonlight, the shadows of night, . . . 64
The rose may boast its vermil dye, . . . 72
There's news frae Moidart came yestreen, . . . 72
'Twas morning, and Eliza arose, . . . 80
They said I must not sing of love, . . . 80
Thou saidst that thou, . . . 96
There is a bloom that never fades, . . . 96
Toil on—toil on—ye ephemeral train, . . . 104
The boy stood on the burning deck, . . . 104
There was heard the sound of a coming foe, . . . 112
The world has many wiles, . . . 128
The peasant-girl's blue eyes, . . . 128
The morning broke. Light stole upon the clouds, . . . 144
To point mankind to Godlike deeds of fame, . . . 144
The shape alone let others prize, . . . 160
The Mirror, which reflects an object true, . . . 160
'Tis twilight, and the day's departed orb, . . . 176
Though clouds should hover o'er our path, . . . 176
There is a dream of woman's love, . . . 184
Thou lonely, evening-tinctured rose, . . . 200
Thou art sounding on, thou mighty sea, . . . 200
There lies a village in a peaceful vale, . . . 202
Thy ruby lips must kiss the brim, . . . 206
Thy soul was never formed for love, . . . 224
The castle of Schoenberg was lofty and fair, . . . 251
The smile I gave to thee is like the blaze, . . . 256
Though life's a dark and cheerless lot, . . . 264
The holy man in fetters bound, . . . 264
The sigh for other's wo that's given, . . . 272
The last leaf of a smitten tree, . . . 283
The youth, whose bark is wafted o'er, . . . 288
The pliant soul of every youth, . . . 288
This little book I'd rather own, . . . 288
'Twas by a lake a knight so brave, . . . 288
To him whose spirit drinks the fading hues, . . . 296
Thy parting word in song was spoken, . . . 296
'Tis bad enough with captious sense, . . . 296
There is music and revelry within, . . . 301
The country ever has a lagging spring, . . . 313
There's a far distant land where the Clonagnow trees, . . . 320
There is a time when all is bright, . . . 320
Thine eye is full of love, . . . 344
Those starry eyes—those starry eyes, . . . 320
'Twas summer eve—the sun, . . . 324
The waters slept: Nights silvary veil hung low, . . . 328
There is a hope in youthful breasts, . . . 336
The sobbings of the midnight sea, . . . 336
Two or three dears, and two or three sweets, . . . 342
The silence of the evening hour, . . . 344
The turning tendrils of the wild grape vine, . . . 344
Tell me, now that thou art mine, . . . 344
Thou art welcome as the day, . . . 352
There is a grief that wastes the heart, . . . 360
The moon was shining yet. The orient's brow, . . . 363
Though from thy bank of velvet torn, . . . 376
'Tis believed that this harp, that I now wake for thee, . . . 376
They told her on this mystic eve, . . . 384
Thou art within the hall of kings, . . . 392
There did one hope pervade my breast, . . . 392

U.

Upon the shore he wildly sprang, . . . 64

W.

Why is it, lady, . . . 8
Who but has felt, . . . 16
Why is thy barque upon the sea, . . . 24
Watchman tell us of the night, . . . 32
Who'll buy my flowers? who'll buy? . . . 40
Weep, for the word is spoken, . . . 48
We parted on a lovely even, . . . 56
When from the eye of day, . . . 56
When the closing day has smiled a soft farewell, . . . 64
With what a glory comes and goes the year, . . . 104
When time was entwining a garland of years, . . . 104
When youth's short primrose spring was o'er, . . . 144
Where blighted hopes, and love deceived, . . . 160
When from the southern land I came, . . . 168
What's sweeter than the calm of even, . . . 173
Whither scud ye so fast, ye ships of heaven, . . . 184
When every leaf is hushed to rest, . . . 200
When at childhood's careless age, . . . 200
When he thought of his home, . . . 200
Wild rose of Alloway, my thanks, . . . 203
What is love? alas! . . . 208
Whenever with haggard eyes I view, . . . 214
With business so much pressed, . . . 216
Why comes he not, . . . 232
Why did I think that I could trace, . . . 240
When a poor little maid feels her senses astray, . . . 240
Why shouldst thou leave me? . . . 248
When starlight gilds the brow of night, . . . 256
With masts that in the fresh wind stoop, . . . 272
What are the summers skies to me? . . . 284
We are the souls that fear not fate, . . . 291
When the tree of Love is budding first, . . . 296
When the bright orb of day withdraws its light, . . . 312
Why mourns thy muse in strains unknown to joy, . . . 320
Where, oh where shall fancy borrow, . . . 336
When countless stars are bright, . . . 352
When Freedom, from her mountain height, . . . 352
Whisper thou tree, thou lonely tree, . . . 360
Would the green curtain of the grave, . . . 368
When I called you a blockhead, . . . 390

Y.

Yes, thou art changed, . . . 40
Ye impatient, ye blasted wight, . . . 56
You ask me why the violet blooms, . . . 96
Young Love in a transport exclaimed, . . . 200
Ye make sad music in my heart, . . . 232
You owe me, Iris, thirty kisses, . . . 360
